WHAT IS LAW?

Law is a body of rules supported by the power of government. It governs the behaviour of all members of society. It is not possible to have a society without laws, as there would be anarchy in society then.

Governments make laws and enforce them against all citizens within their power. They have two motives in making and enforcing laws. One is social control; the other is the implementation of justice. To establish social control governments use public law and civil law. Public law ensures the authority of the government itself and civil law provides framework for interaction among people. Justice is a concept that most people feel is very important but few are able to define. Sometimes a just decision is simply a decision that most people feel is fair.

New laws appear all the time as our life is changing very fast. But no country has been successful in producing laws, which are entirely satisfactory.

Ordinary people start thinking about law only when everyday informal ways of settling disputes break down. When we buy a train ticket, a lawyer may tell us it represents a contract with legal obligations, but to most of us it is just a ticket that gets us on the train. If our neighbour plays loud music late at night, we will probably try to discuss the matter with him rather than consulting the police, lawyers or courts. Only when we are injured in a train accident or when a neighbour refuses to behave reasonably, we start thinking about the legal implications of our everyday activities.

Even so, some transactions in modern society are so complex that few of us would risk making them without first seeking legal advice. We use it when we buy or sell a house, set up a business, or decide whom to give our property to when we die.

On the whole, it seems that people all over the world are becoming more and more accustomed to using legal means to regulate their relations with each other.

As countries cooperate more and more and have an increasing number of common global problems to solve, there are attempts to internationalize legal standards, so that the same legal principles could be applied to all countries and people.

When law helps people to reach just agreements, it is regarded as a good thing. However, when it involves time and money and shows people's inability to cooperate informally, law seems to be an evil — but a necessary one that everyone should have a basic knowledge of.

2. Read, translate and discuss the text.

The question “What is law?” has troubled people for many years. A whole field of study known as jurisprudence (the study of law and legal philosophy) is devoted to answering this question. Many definitions of law exist. For our purposes, however, law can be defined as the rules and regulations made and enforced by the government that regulate the conduct of people within a society.

As a child, you learned about rules first at home and later at school. At home, your parents made and enforced rules concerning issues like chores and bedtimes. Rules made and enforced by the government are called laws. The government makes laws that affect almost every aspect of daily life.

One thing is certain: every society that has ever existed has recognized the need for laws. These laws may have been unwritten, but even pre-industrial societies had rules to regulate people’s conduct. Native American societies, for example, were governed by unwritten laws. When Europeans first arrived on the North American continent, each of the native American nations (or tribes, as they are commonly called today) maintained order through a system of unwritten rules. Because many non-native American government officials and others did not see or understand these traditional mechanisms, many non-native American held the erroneous view that the societies were lawless. Today, some native American groups are still governed, at least in part, by traditional unwritten law.

Without laws, there would be confusion and disorder. This does not mean that all laws are fair or even good, but imagine how people might take advantage of one another without a set of rules.

The statements for discussion:

1. Laws haven’t changed since primeval times.
2. However hard people try, laws are always insufficient.
3. Laws are not for ordinary people, they are for lawyers.
4. All laws are situational. They suit only a particular place at a particular time.
5. There is some eternal law. It is good for all times and places.

LEGAL PROFESSION

In most countries there is only one legal profession. This means that all the lawyers have nearly the same professional education leading to the same legal qualifications, and they are allowed to do all the legal work that has to be done. In England the system is different. Here the profession is divided into two types of lawyers, called solicitors and barristers. Solicitors and barristers are qualified lawyers, but they have a different legal training, they take different examinations to qualify, and once qualified they usually do different types of legal work.

Barristers are sole practitioners. They are forbidden to work as partners. Barristers specialize in arguing cases in front of a judge and have the right to be heard, the right of audience, in all courts. They are specialists in advocacy, which is the skill of speaking for someone in court. They also give opinions on areas of law to solicitors and their clients.

Until July 2004 a client could not instruct a barrister directly. Barristers had to be instructed by a solicitor. Now barristers who have completed a special one-day course can take instructions directly from the client.

Solicitors represent their clients both in and out of court. One of the functions of solicitors is to brief barristers. In other words, they collect all the legal documents to enable the barrister to present the best case to the court. They practice in many areas of law, such as family, employment or commercial law. They draw up wills, give advice in the field of business, make all the legal arrangements for buying or selling land, assist employees and employers in cases involving allegations of unfair dismissal and redundancy payments, handle divorce and child care. However, each solicitor usually specialises in one particular area. A solicitor has the right of audience in lower courts. He has to get a certificate in advocacy to be able to speak in higher courts.

Solicitors usually work in law firms which are set up as partnerships. A new lawyer will usually work first as an associate of the firm and gain some experience while being paid a fixed salary. Then he may be offered the opportunity to become a partner.

In general, it can be said that a barrister spends most of his time either in a courtroom or preparing his arguments for the court and a solicitor spends most of his time in an office giving advice to clients, making investigations and preparing and drafting documents.

After several years of experience, members of either profession may apply to preside over cases and sit as a judge. Within the English legal system a law student cannot take an exam to be a judge but has to wait to be appointed after some years of experience as a lawyer.

STARTING ACTIONS IN COURT

When a person is in dispute with another person, sometimes it is necessary to start a claim in the civil court. This process is called "filing a claim" or "issuing a claim". In England most civil claims are filed with the county court. There are over 200 county courts in England and Wales. Most cities and large towns have a county court. A claim form is the document that a claimant uses to start legal action against the defendant.

Why might a claimant start a claim? There are a lot of reasons, for example:

- someone refuses to pay you money that they owe to you
- someone does a job for you, but they do it badly. This is called bad workmanship
- something that you paid for is not supplied to you
- something that you bought is not working properly.

The claimant has to pay a sum of money, called a court fee, for the court to issue proceedings. In the claim form, the claimant must state the amount of his or her claim and request the defendant to pay all of the legal costs of the case.

In civil cases, the court can award damages to the person who has suffered as the result of wrongdoing. In certain circumstances, the court will issue an injunction to prevent the wrongdoing from occurring again.

Sometimes people talk about "the small claims court". They really mean the special procedure that exists at the county court for small claims. A small claim is a claim for a maximum amount of £5,000. This amount is likely to increase in the future.

Criminal actions are started by the state. Having arrested the suspect, the police must decide if they have enough evidence to make a formal accusation, or charge. If they charge the suspect, they may release him on condition that he appears on a certain day at a certain magistrates' court. This is known as unconditional bail. However, the police may instead take a suspect to a magistrate so that he remains in custody until he next appears before a court. The magistrate may decide that it is not necessary to hold the suspect in custody and may agree to unconditional bail, or the magistrate may grant conditional bail — that is, release the suspect provided that he puts some money as security.

If the defendant is found guilty, the court can order punishment. This can either be a custodial sentence, which means going to prison, or a non-custodial sentence such as a fine, probation or a community service order.

Dear Mr Aikenside
Personal injury claim

Thank you for your instructions in connection with a personal injury that you sustained two days ago. It was a pleasure to meet you at this office.

To enable me to proceed with this matter properly, I would be grateful if you give your attention to the following points:

1. I have enclosed our client care letter. This sets out our fees and the basis on which you instruct this firm to act as your lawyers. You should be aware that this forms a binding legal contract between us and so you must ensure that you understand the contents. When you have read the letter, please sign it and return it to me as soon as possible. I am unable to proceed with your legal matters until I have received this letter.

2. I have drafted a witness statement which is a statement of truth about your claim. This has to be filed at the court together with your claim form. The claim is against shopping centre, where you instructed me that you slipped on an oil-like substance on the floor, fell over and sustained an injury to your back. Please read this statement carefully to ensure that all the facts are correct, before signing it and returning it to me. It is my professional duty to inform you that this document forms the grounds of your claim at court and it is your duty to tell the truth. If you deliberately include facts that are not true, and reaffirm them under oath in court, then you may be prosecuted or perjury, which is the criminal offence of not telling the truth before court.

I look forward to receiving both the signed client care letter and the signed witness statement. As soon as I have received both documents I can proceed with your claim. If you have any questions about either document, or the case in general, please do not hesitate to contact me and I will be happy to go through any points with you. You can contact me by telephone, or contact my secretary to arrange a convenient meeting.

Yours sincerely

Adam Hicks

LAW OF TORT

The concept of tort is used in most English-speaking states with common law traditions. A tort is a wrongful act committed by an individual against another individual's person, property or reputation.

The law of tort deals with civil wrongs. A wrong is something that causes harm or damage to another person. A person who suffers harm or damage is hurt in some way. This hurt might be physical in nature, but it might be some other type of hurt, such as causing someone to lose money. The law of tort is connected with the breach of the duty of care by accident but sometimes deliberately. This area of law is based on the following principle. In situations where I cause harm to another person, I may be liable to compensate him or her for that harm, even in situations when:

- I do not have a contract with that person and
- I did not commit a criminal act against that person.

Let's say that I am shopping in a large supermarket and an employee of the supermarket washed the floor five minutes ago. The floor is not completely dry. I do not know this. There is no sign to warn me that the floor is wet. I slip on the floor and hurt my back. I have to go to hospital and I cannot go to work for a month. This is a situation where I need to make a claim based on the principles of the law of tort. I am hurt physically and I have perhaps lost money, all because of someone else's conduct.

How is this area of law different from criminal law or contract law? The answer to this question is that there is a lot of overlap between the law of tort, contract law and criminal law. Although a tort and a crime appear to be the same in many cases, the parties, burden of proof, and punishment are different. The main purpose of the law of tort is to compensate people who suffer harm and not to punish the tortfeasors, people who caused this harm. The main aim of criminal law is to punish wrongdoers and to deter other people from committing similar wrongs.

In a tortious action the claimant is the injured party who has to prove the elements of his case. If he wins, he is entitled to redress to compensate him for his injury. The usual remedies in tort are damages and injunction.

Crimes usually involve public law and order. Therefore, in a criminal action the claimant is the state, represented by the prosecutor. The person charged with committing a crime is the defendant. The injured party is merely a complaining witness. The state has the burden of proof. It is higher than in a tortious action. The convicted defendant either pays a fine, or goes to prison. The injured party receives nothing. Sometimes a crime is also a tort and the injured party may try to get damages in a civil court.

An important difference between the law of tort and contract law is that the law of tort makes us liable to people with whom we have no contractual relationship. Contractual liability is based on agreement between parties. Tort liability is based on the duty one person owes to another. It is imposed by law regardless of whether or not there is an agreement between the parties.

HEADS OF TORT

Lawyers refer to different kinds of torts as the heads of tort, the most important of which are:

- negligence
- nuisance
- trespass to land
- trespass to the person
- defamation
- product liability
- vicarious liability

Negligence occurs when you cause harm to another person because you were not careful enough. The law of tort says that in situations where you can anticipate that your conduct is likely to cause harm to another person you have a duty to be careful. Lawyers refer to this duty as the duty of care. Negligence covers breach of the duty of care. It is the most common ground for claimants bringing an action in tort.

Nuisance covers an unreasonable interference with a person's use or enjoyment of land. This tort can be used in many situations. An individual can sue in the tort of nuisance when his neighbour creates too much noise or keeps rubbish that causes unpleasant smells.

Trespass to land covers entering someone's land without the owner's permission. Trespass to the person means harming someone in a physical way. To make someone afraid that I will physically hurt him is the tort of assault. To actually hurt someone in a physical way is the tort of battery. To keep someone in a certain place without that person's permission is the tort of false imprisonment.

Defamation covers attacks against someone's reputation through the written or spoken word. In other words, it means saying or writing something negative about someone, so that other people think in a more negative way about that person. Defamation comes in two forms. The tort of libel is publishing a libellous statement in a permanent form, for example, writing it in a book. The tort of slander refers to a statement in a form that is not permanent, for example, saying something slanderous in an ordinary conversation.

Product liability is the seller's or manufacturer's responsibility for damage or injury caused by faulty goods. Vicarious liability (liability on behalf of someone else) gives the right to sue the employer of a person who commits a tort in the normal course of his employment. The tort is useful when high damages are sought and the defendant does not have the money to pay them.

A lot of torts are based on the common law that is on precedents. Some torts come from statutes and are known as statutory torts. The breach of duty that must be proved is defined in a statute. For example, injury suffered because of defective equipment may lead to a negligence action regulated by the 1969 Employers Liability Act.

However, not every wrong committed in the society is remediable in tort. The claimant has to show that he has suffered an action recognised as a tortious one and he has to show that his relation to the tortfeasor gives him the legal capacity to sue.

Determine which the head of tort is: battery, nuisance, defamation, negligence, false, imprisonment, assault, vicarious, liability.

AREAS OF LAW

Every country has its own legal system and its own set of laws that are called national (domestic) law. National law includes not only law at the national level, but law at the state, regional or local levels. For example, the USA has federal laws and state laws as well.

International law regulates relations between governments and also between private citizens of one country and those of another. States agree to obey international law by being members of a great international organization such as the United Nations, or by entering into treaties with one another.

Many countries make an important distinction between civil (or private) and public law. Civil law concerns disputes among citizens within a country, and public law concerns disputes between subjects of law (citizens, companies) and the state.

In civil law there is the attempt to right a wrong, honour an agreement, or settle a dispute. The main categories of English civil law are: law of contract, law of tort, law of trust, probate law, company law, employment law, land law, family law, intellectual property law and others.

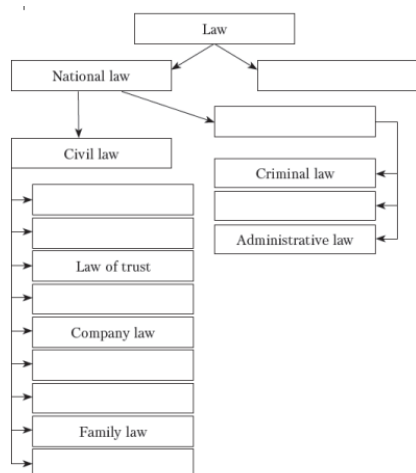

The main categories of public law are criminal law, constitutional law and administrative law.

Criminal law deals with wrongs (crimes) which harm the well-being of society, even when they are committed a crime against an individual. The main aim of criminal law is to deter other people from committing similar wrongs.

Constitutional law states the citizen's rights and duties. It also regulates the relationships between different branches of the state, such as the executive, the legislative and the judiciary ones. Constitutional law is usually found in the Constitution of the country. However, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, due to historical and political reasons the Constitution does not exist in one written document. The UK has an unwritten constitution — the constitution of this state is usually found in statutes such as Magna Carta, Bill of Rights and others.

Administrative law is enforced by the executive branch of the government rather than the legislative and the judiciary branches. It regulates international trade, taxation, environment protection, manufacturing.

Criminal and civil procedures are different. Criminal actions are nearly always started by the state. Civil actions, on the other hand, are usually started by individuals. The party bringing a criminal action (that is in most cases the state) is called the prosecution. The party bringing a civil action is called the claimant. The party accused in court of a crime or a civil offence is called the defendant in both kinds of actions.

In most countries there is only one legal profession. This means that all the lawyers have nearly the same professional education leading to the same legal qualifications, and they are allowed to do all the legal work that has to be done. In England the system is different. Here the profession is divided into two types of lawyers, called solicitors and barristers. Solicitors and barristers are qualified lawyers, but they have a different legal training, they take different examinations to qualify, and once qualified they usually do different types of legal work.

Barristers are sole practitioners. They are forbidden to work as partners. Barristers specialize in arguing cases in front of a judge and have the right to be heard, the right of audience, in all courts. They are specialists in advocacy, which is the skill of speaking for someone in court. They also give opinions on areas of law to solicitors and their clients.

Until July 2004 a client could not instruct a barrister directly. Barristers had to be instructed by a solicitor. Now barristers who have completed a special one-day course can take instructions directly from the client.

Solicitors represent their clients both in and out of court. One of the functions of solicitors is to brief barristers. In other words, they collect all the legal documents to enable the barrister to present the best case to the court. They practice in many areas of law, such as family, employment or commercial law. They draw up wills, give advice in the field of business, make all the legal arrangements for buying or selling land, assist employees and employers in cases involving allegations of unfair dismissal and redundancy payments, handle divorce and child care. However, each solicitor usually specialises in one particular area. A solicitor has the right of audience in lower courts. He has to get a certificate in advocacy to be able to speak in higher courts.

Solicitors usually work in law firms which are set up as partnerships. A new lawyer will usually work first as an associate of the firm and gain some experience while being paid a fixed salary. Then he may be offered the opportunity to become a partner.

In general, it can be said that a barrister spends most of his time either in a courtroom or preparing his arguments for the court and a solicitor spends most of his time in an office giving advice to clients, making investigations and preparing and drafting documents.

After several years of experience, members of either profession may apply to preside over cases and sit as a judge. Within the English legal system a law student cannot take an exam to be a judge but has to wait to be appointed after some years of experience as a lawyer.

3. Read the text below and choose the word which best fits each space: partner, qualify, partnerships, judge, practices, court, client, solicitor, attorney, audience, associate, issued.

In England we have two different types of lawyer. One is known as a (1) _____ and the other is a barrister. Both are called “lawyers”. This can be a little confusing because in the USA every lawyer is usually known as an (2) _____. An English law student has to decide at sometime during their university studies which type of lawyer that they would like to (3) _____ as.

Most English law students decide to become a solicitor. These are the lawyers that a (4) _____, the person who pays for the services of a lawyer, will usually meet first. Often the solicitor can help the client without the need for a barrister.

Most solicitors work in small private businesses, known as (5) _____, in what are called “High Street firms”. This phrase “High Street firm” refers to a typical, small group of solicitors working together in the type of offices that you can find on the major streets of any English town or city. Many law firms are set up as (6) _____. A new lawyer will usually work first as an (7) _____.

_____ of the firm and gain some experience while being paid a fixed salary before being offered the opportunity to become a (8) _____.

A typical High Street solicitor usually specialises in a particular area of law, such as family, employment or commercial law. Many people believe that solicitors cannot act for their clients in (9) _____ but this is untrue. Thousands of solicitors appear in court every day, especially in the county courts where most claims are (10) _____.

The second type of lawyer found in England is known as a barrister. Barristers are usually specialists in a very particular area of law. They give advice and opinions to solicitors and their clients. Barristers have the right of (11) _____ (the right to be heard by a judge) in all of the courts in the land. Barristers often share offices, known by the traditional name of chambers, although they all work alone as individuals because they are forbidden to work as partners.

After several years of experience, members of either profession may apply to preside over cases and sit as a (12) _____. Within the English legal system a law student cannot take an exam to be a judge but has to wait to be appointed after some years of experience as a lawyer.

ENGLISH COURTS

There are civil and criminal courts within the English legal system. Civil courts resolve disputes between private citizens or between private citizens and the state. In criminal courts, cases are brought against a person who has broken the law. The wrongdoer is sued in a civil court while in a criminal court he is prosecuted.

Cases brought before civil courts are to do with legal matters such as breach of contract, trespass to property, and disputes over land or the wrongful exercise of power by public servants. Civil cases are usually considered in county courts.

Cases brought before criminal courts are to do with offences against the state which, these days, usually involve breach of the statutory law. Minor criminal cases and some civil matters such as debts are started in magistrates' courts and are heard by lay magistrates called Justices of Peace. Offenders who are aged between 10 and 17 are dealt with by Youth Courts with specially trained magistrates. These courts are not open to the public.

Some serious crimes, like murder, cannot be heard by the magistrates. They must go to the Crown Court. And there are some offences where the defendant is given the choice of having his case heard either in the magistrates' court or the Crown Court. It takes much longer to have a case heard in the Crown Court, but some defendants prefer it because the facts of the case are decided by a jury, that is, ordinary members of the public. Jurors are to decide questions of fact and give a verdict that is to say whether the defendant is guilty or not.

If the defendant is dissatisfied with the court decision he can appeal to a higher court requesting it to re-examine and change the judgment.

Appeals from the Crown Court go first to the High Court and, in special cases, to the Court of Appeal. Occasionally, a case is carried through this system of appeal all the way to the Supreme Court, the final court of appeal. Its decisions on both criminal and civil matters bind all other courts. Only the government can overturn a decision of the Supreme Court and then, only by passing an Act of Parliament.

In addition to courts Parliament sets a lot of tribunals, independent judicial bodies, which hear appeals made in certain types of cases. There are employment tribunals, immigration tribunals and others. In their decisions they must comply with the law. Otherwise, their decisions may be challenged by the High Court.

2. Fill in the gaps using the chart above.

1. Claims of lesser value will start in a _____. There are 250 of these around the country. They can also deal with divorce and bankruptcy matters.
2. Matters of important legal dispute arising in the Crown Court may be appealed to the _____.
3. From the Court of Appeal, there can be an appeal to the _____ on fact or law, but usually appeal is only allowed on matters of legal importance.
4. If the case involves a serious crime, it is heard in the _____ (there is only one _____ but it has about 70 centres around the jurisdiction).
5. In less serious criminal cases (which comprise over 90% of criminal cases), the case is sent for trial in one of over 400 _____.
6. More substantial civil claims (over around £25,000) are heard in the _____.
7. Under the system of appeals in civil cases, it is possible to appeal from a county court or the High Court to the _____.

3. Read the text below and choose the word which best fits each space: higher, barristers, magistrates, qualified, jury, defendant, legal, system, professionals.

The largest group of judges are (1) _____, ordinary citizens who are not legal (2) _____ but are appointed to ensure that the local community is involved in the running of the (3) _____. They sit as a group of three (as a “bench”). Magistrates sit with a legally (4) _____ clerk, who can advise on points of law. A case is presented by the (5) _____, who takes over the case from the police who have already charged the (6) _____ (or accused) with specified crimes. In the (7) _____ courts, the judges are almost all former (8) _____. But many cases are also heard by recorders — part-time barristers from private practice. The cases in the Crown Court are heard by the (9) _____. The Crown Court jury consists of 12 persons, aged 18 to 70.

1. Here is a conversation between a lawyer and his client. The conversation is mixed up. Put the conversation in the correct order. Write your answers in the boxes numbered 2-9 below. There is an example at the beginning (*), which is the start of the conversation.

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

(*) Good Morning, Mr Rodriguez. Thank you for coming to see me. I understand that you would like to issue a claim in the county court?

a. Three months is a long time. I agree that you should issue a claim. I will explain to you how it all works. The first thing that we must do is to complete a claim form and file it at the county court.

b. Yes, you will have to pay a fee. But if you win, the judge will usually order the defendant to pay back the fee. The next thing that happens after we file the claim is that the court will serve the claim form upon the defendant.

c. Yes, that is correct. I think going to court is the only thing that I can do. I supply food to restaurants and cafes. I have a contract with all of my customers. The contract states that a customer has 14 days to pay me from the date they receive a delivery. A customer who owns a cafe in town is three months late in paying me. I would like to start proceedings against him.

d. I see. What information do you need to complete the claim form?

e. He has 14 days to respond. In this case I hope your customer agrees that your claim is correct and that he will pay the money he owes you when he receives the claim. That is the best thing that can happen.

f. I need the name and address of your customer. When we file the claim your customer will be called the defendant. I also need the details of your claim. I need to know when the defendant received the delivery from you and when he was supposed to pay you. Please bring me a copy of the contract so that I can check the part of it that talks about payment. How much money does he owe you?

g. And when he receives the claim how many days does he have to respond to it?

h. £430. I can bring a copy of the contract to your office this afternoon. What happens when we file the claim? Do I have to pay a court fee?

EMPLOYMENT LAW

Employment law deals with relationship between employers and employees in a recruitment process, during employment and at the end of employment. It is related to most aspects of employment including discrimination, fair pay, dismissal, employee benefits, and workplace safety, etc.

In the UK rights and obligations of employers and employees come from the following main sources:

- Acts of Parliament, which give rise to statutory rights and obligations;
- Employment contracts, which give rise to contractual rights and obligations. This area of law is largely governed by case law;
- European Union legislation and judgments from the European Court of Justice.

Clauses in employment contracts cover job title, hours of work, term of the contract, time off and leave, remuneration, sick pay, confidentiality, giving notice. The non-competition clause imposes restrictions on the actions of an employee once the employment is ended. The employee is not allowed to start the same business or work for a rival of the employer for a certain period of time. The employment contract also provides for the grievance procedure in the event of the employee's problems at work or job loss. The parties to the employment contract may agree to vary provisions of the contract but they cannot be unilaterally varied.

The Employment Rights Act 1996 requires the employer to provide the employee with a document containing the terms and conditions of employment.

Employers are bound by the employment contract and statutory regulation as to how they may deal with employees, particularly in relation to the termination of employment. Failure to observe such obligations and regulations may give rise to a claim for wrongful dismissal, constructive dismissal or unfair dismissal. In case of wrongful dismissal the employer is in breach of contract. When an employee resigns because of the conduct of his employer, it is constructive dismissal. Unfair dismissal happens when the employer breaches certain statutory provisions by dismissing an employee. For example, an employee has been dismissed because of his sex, age, race, disability or nationality or made redundant unfairly. The employment law also states that the employer is obliged to follow a certain procedure of warning the employee before terminating the contract with him. If the employer fails to do this, the employee may also claim unfair dismissal. However, the employer does not have to follow the procedure when the employee is guilty of gross misconduct that is a very bad behaviour, such as stealing money from the employer. Gross misconduct may result in immediate dismissal.

Employment cases in the UK are heard in employment tribunals. Employment tribunals have the power to make decisions on employment cases but there is a period where the parties are encouraged to reach an agreement before the case is heard.

A new employee has some questions about her employment contract. Complete each question using the correct word from the box below. Use the text.
